South Dublin County Council hopes that this publication of place names in the County will encourage people living and working in the County to use with confidence the place names provided in the Irish Language. This book should help bring uniformity to the Irish and English of place names across the county.

Place names in the Irish Language are a clear link to our history and heritage and important to preserve. The rich history of South Dublin County can easily be seen here in our place names. This has been great opportunity for South Dublin County Council to produce an official record of all place names in the county.

There has been much work done by many people to collate this information and compile a comprehensive listing of all Irish and English place names in the county.

We would like to thank staff of the Place names Commission, The Department of Community, Rural and Gaeltacht Affairs, in particular Dónall Mac Giolla Easpaig, Chief Place Names Officer. We are also very grateful to Dr. Pádraig O Cearbhaill, Higher Place Names Officer and Sara Ní Chonchúir, both of whom worked tirelessly on the listing of Irish names and composed the overview of history and place names in South Dublin County Council.

We would also like to thank John O Connor of the Ordnance Survey of Ireland, who has worked closely with The Place Names Commission, An Post and South Dublin County Council to make this publication possible.

There has been much done here in South Dublin County Council to make this book possible and we would like to take this opportunity to thanks all staff involved, in particular Niall Hayden and John Powers of our the Roads Department.

This publication is available from www.southdublin.ie, and copies free of charge from the Irish Office, South Dublin County Council, County Hall, Tallaght, Dublin 24, Gaeilge@sdbulincoco.ie or 01 414 9000.

Pádraig Ó Cearbhaill (le cúnamh ó Sara Ní Chonchúir)

The following is an introduction to a bilingual list of streetnames within the local jurisdiction of South Dublin County Council. A complete list of the English names was initially prepared in electronic format by Ordnance Survey Ireland and the Irish forms of the names were researched by the Placenames Branch, Department of Community Rural and Gaeltacht Affairs. 'Streetnames' is used in this article in a general sense to refer to names of housing-estates, of apartment blocks, of roads, of streets and of various other local names. South Dublin corresponds, to a large degree, to the old administrative baronies of Newcastle and Uppercross. Its extent is described as follows on the South Dublin County Council web site: 'It [South Dublin] is bounded by the Dublin mountains to the south and stretches from the River Liffey at Lucan through Palmerston, Clondalkin, south to Newcastle, Rathcoole, Saggart. It includes Tallaght West, South and Central and stretches east to Templeogue and Rathfarnham.'

I shall consider some of the traditional placenames within the region, townland and parish names, as well as streetnames. Over eighty townland and parish names are used as elements in the formation of streetnames, often in the formation of a range of names in the South Dublin region, such as, Esker Drive, Esker Glebe, Lane, Lawns, Lodge, Esker Meadow Court, Esker Wood Court etc. The initial element of the previous names comes from the Irish word eiscir, meaning 'an esker' or 'gravel hill'. Esker/Eiscir is the name of a parish of medieval origin situated beside Lucan and is also the first element of two townlands within the parish, Esker North and South. The original placename, in this instance, consists of a single word which is still intelligible. We know from ecclesiastical sources that Eskyr was already in use in the twelfth century. As this 'esker' is regarded as the eastern extremity of the well known Eiscir Riada, it also gave rise to another series of new names in Lucan, Castle Riada Crescent, Drive, Grove and Road.

There are other extant placenames consisting of a single word, similar to Eiscir, which are also found in early sources, such as the parish and townland of Cruagh on the slopes of the Dublin mountains. 'Ecclesia de Creuach' is recorded, for instance, in Crede Mihi, the early register of the Archbishops of Dublin. An Chraobhach, the original Irish name, is referred to in a poem composed in the latter half of the sixteenth century, which extolled the preys taken by Aodh mac Seaáin Ó Broin (or O'Byrne), chief of the Gabhal Raghnuill territory in Co. Wicklow, from various places in south Co. Dublin and beyond. The name means a place of branches or of trees.

Another example of an early placename, without any qualifier, is Tallaght or Tamhlacht (earlier Tamlachta) in Irish, the illustrious monastery which was founded by Maolruain (earlier Máel-Rúain) who died in 792. There are a number of different places called Tamhlacht and it is understood to denote a pre-Christian burial site. Research carried out by the Placenames Branch would indicate that the townland of Rowlagh, which is south of Palmerston (by Chapelizod), may also contain the word Tamhlacht. It was formerly in the possession of the Hospital of St. John the Baptist, which was founded by Ailred the Palmer and whose sobriquet endures in the placename Palmerston. Early examples of Rowlagh, which were recorded in the Register of the aforesaid Hospital, such as Rouelachteg and Roueholachteig from about 1190, are probably transcriptions of Irish Rua-Thamhlacht - rua means red-coloured.

The River Dodder / (An) Dothra is undoubtedly an old name and its meaning is obscure. The river flows by Bohernabreena / Bóthar na Bruíne, signifying the road of the Bruíon (earlier bruiden) or 'hostel'. The bruíon of the last-mentioned name is equated with Bruiden Da Derga, whose destruction is described in a famous early Irish saga. According to the tale, the River Dodder actually flowed through the hostel.

Yet another placename consisting of a single word is Skeagh / Sceach, meaning 'a thorn bush', which is the name of a townland located on the border of Co. Kildare, in the Parish of Newcastle. It is also found in early sources, where it is qualified by a personal name. In the notes attached to the Martyrology of Oengus (Féilire Oengusso) about the eleventh century - the metrical calendar proper was composed at Tallaght about 800 by Aonghas mac Aonghobhann, a disciple of Maolruain - it is stated that a certain Conlaed, St. Brigit's chief artisan, was killed 'ic Scethaib Connla i taib Liamna i Maig Laigin', meaning 'at Sceich Connla (Connla's thornbushes) beside Liamain in Mag Laigen (the plain of Leinster)'. As the modern townland of Skeagh was part of the now obsolete land-unit of Tibberbride or Tobberbride in seventeenth century sources and as the latter name corresponds to Tobar Bhríde in Irish, meaning 'St. Bridget's well', the identification of Sceich (nominative plural of scé, later sceach) Connla with Skeagh is bolstered further.

The afore-cited Liamain, or Liamhain in Modern Irish, was a place of considerable importance for a long period of time. It was once the royal seat of the Uí Dhúinchadha dynasty in Leinster, whose name is preserved in the original Irish name of Dolphin's Barn, Carnán Cluana Uí Dhúinchadha, now shortened to An Carnán. Liamhain was subsequently a stronghold of the Scandinavians of Dublin, according to the eleventh-century Lebor na Cert ('Book of Rights'). Newcastle was built by the Anglo-Normans in the same area, as is evident from early references to it such as, 'Newcastle de Leuan' (1223), 'de Novo castro de Lyouns' (1340) and subsequently Caislén Nua Liamhain in the previously mentioned eulogy of Aodh Ó Broin in the Leabhar Branach. The name survives as Lyons Hill and Parish in Co. Kildare and also in the much more modern Lyons Road / Bóthar Liamhna on the Kildare-Dublin border. Knocklyon, which is situated about fifteen kilometres further east between Ballyboden and Firhouse, is of a different origin. The latter was recorded as Cnoclin and Cnoclyn in early fourteenth century administrative rolls. The second part of the name is clearly monosyllabic and is possibly the genitive singular of líon, a noun variously meaning 'flax', 'net' or 'snare'. The Irish of Knocklyon, Knocklyon Road etc. is therefore incorrectly shown on signage as Cnoc Liamhna, Bóthar Chnoc Liamhna, instead of Cnoc Lín.

By a strange turn of events, the Irish placenames which I have discussed heretofore, consisting of one word (and occasionally preceded by the definite article), are mirrored by a type of nomenclature which is in vogue in present day Ireland. This modern type of name is formed by the English definite article followed by a noun, which may be toponymic and is often obscure or uncommon. The following are some examples from the South Dublin area: The Briers, The Coppice, The Covert, The Dingle, The Garth, The Oval, The Paddocks, The Tudors and The Sacra. I will return to the last-mentioned name further on.

An important group of early placenames are those which have ecclesiastical settlement terms. There are a number of church sites in South Dublin whose names begin with Cill, a Latin loan-word, primarily meaning a church. Kilmainham which is within the Dublin City Council area, is derived from Cill Mhaighneann (earlier Cell Maignenn). In the Martyrology of Tallaght, compiled at the Monastery of Tallaght about 800 (but prior to the Martyrology of Oengus), the entry 'Maigniu abb. Cilli Magnenn' celebrates the abbot whose name is perpetuated in the placename. Killinenny / Cill na nIníon is located, 'i ttaobh Tamhlachta andes' ('beside Tallaght to the south') according to the Martyrology of Gorman (compiled about 1170c). The placename means 'the church of the daughters', or 'the daughters of Mac lair' as they are also called. There are, in fact, a number of churches which are named after the daughters of a particular individual, such as Killiney / Cill Iníon Léinín in Dún Laoghaire-Rathdown, and the obsolete Cell Ingen nAilella, 'the church of the daughters of Ailill', which was situated beside Liamhain according to one of the notes added to Féilire Oengusso. Killinardan / Cill an Ardáin means 'the church of the small height'. Kilnamanagh / Cill na Manach, 'the church of the monks', is referred to in the genealogies of Irish saints as, 'Cell Manach Escrach i nUíbh Dúinchada' i.e. Cill Manach [by] Eiscir in [the the territory of] Uí Dhúinchadha. Kilmahuddrick is said to be dedicated to St. Cuthbert, a seventh century Anglo-Saxon monk and bishop of Lindisfarne. Early examples of the last-mentioned placename are recorded in Archbishop Alen's Register, such as Kylmaccudricke and Killmacodricke.

Teach or tigh (originally the dative singular form) is a native Irish word, meaning 'house'. It often signifies a church in placenames, such as Tymon now written Tigh Motháin, whose second element may derive from Muadhán, a saint's name. Earlier forms of Templeogue, now written Teach Mealóg in Irish, such as Teg Dologa (late twelfth century) and Tachmelog in Crede Mihi are consistent with the personal name Mológa / Dológa. Initial Mo- or Do- are often part of the pet-forms of saints' names, such as Mochua of Cluain Dolcáin who is also called Crónán in early sources. Another example of the pet-form of a saint's name manifests itself in early forms of Saggart / Teach Sagard, such as 'Moshacru in Tech Tacru' (Martyrology of Tallaght). Note that in Old-Irish orthography the sound /g/ is written c in internal position, as in the previous example of the saint's name, Moshacru. The placename was subsequently recorded in Modern Irish orthography as Teagh Thagra in the sixteenth century composition on the O'Byrnes, to which I previously referred. It was recorded as Tassagard (with variations) in Latin documents from the thirteenth century and the shortened name Saggard didn't occur until the seventeenth century. It goes without saying that the placename isn't derived from Irish sagart, 'a priest'. I should also note that The Sacra, the name of a relatively new apartment block in the Saggart area, displays a total misapprehension of the placename's origin. Steach or Stigh is another form of Teach occurring in North Leinster placenames. Steach Guaire, 'the house of Guaire', is an obsolete name which was formerly located in the vicinity of Palmerston.

The following placename probably also had initial Teach / Steach, according to the fourteenth century examples which are preserved in Alen's Register: Staghcony, Taghcummy. It was subsequently transliterated as Stagoni, Stagonny, Teggonnagh in the early seventeenth century and as Tygunny in the early nineteenth century. The name has survived as Gunny Hill, which is located beside Oldcourt. In our opinion, the original Irish name was Teach gConaigh, meaning 'the house of (St.) Conach'. The same personal name occurs in the placename Ard Conaigh ('height of Conach'), a heretofore unidentified ecclesiastical site in Leinster which is recorded in the medieval Genealogies of Irish saints; the location of Ard Conaigh and Teach gConaigh may be the same.

Besides ecclesiastical settlement terms, personal names can also be indicative of church influence. Ballymaice for instance, which is situated in the civil parish of Tallaght, is derived from Baile Maoiliosa. The personal name following baile, 'town(land)', in this instance, means 'devotee / servant of Jesus'. Maoiliosa was a relatively common name amongst Church office holders, as is evident from the Early Irish Annals. Ronanstown, in the parish of Clondalkin, is an English translation of Baile Uí Rónáin. The name Rónán has long been associated with the monastery of Clondalkin and the death in 1086 of 'Fiachna ua Rónáin airchinneach [i.e. superior] Cluana Dolcáin' is recorded in various Annals. Finally, as regards ecclesiastical names, Calliaghston/Baile na gCailleach in the parish of Rathcoole, signifies 'the town(land) of the nuns', and it was once in the possession of the convent of St. Mary of Hogges in Dublin.

The names of many of the saints discussed above are also used in the formation of streetnames in South Dublin, such as St. Aongus's Court / Cúirt Aonghasa, St. Bridget's Drive / Céide Bhríde, St. Cuthbert's Court / Cúirt Chuidbhrícht, St. Maelruan's Park / Páirc Mhaolruain, Kilcronan / Cill Chrónáin and Cluain Chrónáin (a modern Irish name). I have already referred to the monastery of Lindisfarne, in North East England, in connection with St. Cuthbert. Both Lindisfarne and the monastery of Melrose (in Scotland) were founded by St. Aidan or Aédán (later Aodhán). Hence the origin of streetnames such as Lindisfarne Avenue / Ascaill Oileán Lindisfarne, Melrose Avenue / Ascaill Mhaolrosa, St. Aidan's Close / Clós Aodhán.

One further aspect of placenames that I wish to touch on is the foreign element in placenames. There are very few placenames of Norse origin in South Dublin, in spite of the documented Viking influence within the region. The Viking fortress of 'Dun Amhlaim oc Cluain Dolcain' (i.e. 'the fort of Amhlaib at Clondalkin') is referred to in the Annals of Ulster in the (corrected) year 867, when it was burned by Irish forces. Amhlaib (later Amhlaoihb) is an Irish form of Old Norse Áleifr. Of course, the name of the fort as recorded in the Annals, is in the Irish-language. The placename Leixlip, on the other hand, is of Old Norse origin. It means 'a place where salmon leap', referring to a cataract on the River Liffey. The name was subsequently borrowed into Middle English, as distinct from Irish. In fact, the majority of Norse placenames in Ireland weren't subsumed into the Irish-language.

Moving on to the Anglo-Norman period, some of the townland names within the region refer to the military nature of the conquest, such as the previously-mentioned Newcastle and also Castlewarden on the border of Co. Kildare. The latter is recorded in the Register of the Abbey of St. Thomas as Castellum Warin (around 1195) and subsequently in a different document as Castell Warnyng in 1495, which in turn became Caislén Bharruin (or Bairnin) in Irish by the sixteenth century (for which see Leabhar Branach). The townland of Brittas is referred to in Alen's Register as le Bretage, Bretas, Bretach with other variants. Briotás is documented elsewhere in the Irish-language and it comes from Anglo-Norman bretasse, meaning a temporary wooden breastwork. Considering its meaning, the location of Brittas, on the south western border of Co. Wicklow, is of interest.

South Dublin Placenames and Streetnames

Logainmneacha agus Sráidainmneacha Bhaile Átha Cliath Theas

The following are some townland names of early English origin: Stannaway (on the border of South Dublin) recorded as Stony wey in 1296; Newlands referred to as le Newland in 1313; Coldcut recorded as Coldecot in 1435, meaning 'a cold hut'; Hazelhatch written Haselhyrst in 1405, meaning 'hazel wood'. Backweston, which is recorded as Bakbyestoun in 1395, is derived from an Anglo-Norman surname written variously Bakepuz, de Bakepuz etc. in late thirteenth century documents. It is a local surname, which derives from the placename Bacquepuis in Normandy. The surname has endured as final element in the English placename Kingston Bagpuize which is situated in Oxfordshire. Johnstown, in the parish of Rathcoole, is named after a certain 'John son of John de Penris' (1236). 'Penris' is also a local surname, as it comes from the Welsh placename Pen-rhys.

There are various other names of foreign origin which didn't become established in South Dublin until the eighteenth or nineteenth centuries, such as Argos (a place of historic interest in Greece), Gibraltar, Mountpelier and Portobello. Foreign placenames are undoubtedly greatly favoured in the formation of streetnames in present day Ireland. Examples of foreign placenames occurring in South Dublin streetnames are as follows:

- Airton (Airton Road), Aylesbury, Beverly, Cherbury, Eaton, Hanbury, Kennington, Kew, Rushbrook, Westbourne and Willington (the foregoing are all English placenames);
- Airlie, Drysdale and Fettercairn (Scotland) - Tay Lane, on the other hand, is more likely to refer to tea than to the River Tay;
- Bewley (< Beaulieu) and possibly Tournville (France);
- First - Fourth Avenue (New York presumably!).

There are, of course, many other streetnames in South Dublin which are derived from historical names within the region itself, such as Bolbrook Avenue. That name comes from Bolbrook Paper Mill in Tallaght, which is shown on the first edition of the Ordnance Survey six inch map (Co. Dublin, published in 1837). Prior to that, it was named Boldbrook Paper Mill on William Duncan's map of Co. Dublin (1821). The name is probably based on the surname Archbold, a papermaker, and proprietor of the mill in the mid- eighteenth century.

Finally, I will conclude this introduction with a few streetnames whose obscure origin have defied the best efforts of the Placenames Branch, Delaford Avenue, Kennelsfort Road, Magna Drive and De Selby Close. As it happens, De Selby is the name of a character in Flann O'Brien's novel The Third Policeman!
